

Emotionally Intelligent Leadership

Overview

The current landscape of public education demands that school leaders at every level must re-imagine the scope, intent, and focus of leadership. The mental health crisis that has enveloped society is mirrored in public schools. Both staff and students are suffering from high levels of stress and anxiety, as well as other serious mental health concerns that impact learning, school culture, and school safety.

Emotionally Intelligent Leadership is a 5-part training that addresses the challenges schools are facing as well as the impact of emotionally intelligent leadership. The 5-part series will be offered as a full training over 3 days or can be divided into single training sessions tailored to the needs and wants of school districts. The goal of the training is twofold: 1) for participants to become aware of their own emotional intelligence and ways they can recognize needs in others; 2) once seen in others what can be done to support them.

The 5-Part series consists of the following sessions:

- Emotionally Intelligent Leadership - What is it, and why do we need it more than ever?
- Addressing and combating the prolific mental health concerns of staff and students
- Enhancing teacher and student engagement
- Creating a positive school culture
- Increasing school safety

Target Groups:

Leadership teams
Counselors
Student resource officers
Teachers

In addition to the 5-part series, Kem Edwards is available for:

- Counselor Coaching
- Counseling Program Development
- Ownership Culture - building internal leadership in a school counseling program
